

paying attention to that man behind the curtain ...

Ah Gerald Celente!

In the following interview Gerald Celente says "the LIBOR scandal should be the story of the 21st century. Everyone on the planet was affected by this criminal activity!"

First listen to him here, then find out who he is here where it says:

Celente was born in The Bronx, New York City, New York. He had early political experience running a mayoral campaign in Yonkers, New York and served as executive assistant to the secretary of the New York State Senate, which Celente called the worst job he ever had.

In April 2009 Celente wrote, "Wall Street controls our financial lives; the media manipulates our minds. These systems cannot be changed from within. There is no alternative. Without a revolution, these institutions will bankrupt the country, keep fighting failed wars, start new ones, and hold us in perpetual intellectual subjugation."

hmmmm...

If you want a front row seat to the unfolding "scandal of the century" read the ZeroHedge short version of Grant William's latest post at "Things that make you go hmmmm", or read his full text at Scribd here, where he concludes:

In my humble opinion, the Libor scandal (which has a LONG way to go before it has played out and which will claim a LOT more scalps) will mark a fundamental change in the treatment of financial conspiracy theories in the media....

It could well signal the return of the Woodward & Bernstein school of journalism that has been so notably absent in our celebrity-obsessed culture.... But perhaps, most-of-all, watching how quickly those in high places begin to throw each other under the bus, it will hasten the end of many other possible government conspiracies as exposing such events becomes an exercise in self preservation.
